BRYAN'S LECTURE TOUR.

The New York Journal gives the following reasons why Bryan quit his lecturing tour. It says:

Although the first and last lecture at De Giv's opera-house, in Atlanta, brought receipts amounting to $2,300, Mr. Bryan was induced to cancel his contract by the action of the managers, who insisted on making a hippodrome of his appearances. Rather than depart from the dignified position he maintained throughout the campaign, he decided to return to his home in Lincoln.

Mr. Bryan was led to believe from the very start that his tour was to have been of the most non-sensational. He understood that he was to be taken strictly on his merits, and that the most formal and modest method of filing was to be used in announcing his coming. Instead of this, he was confronted in Atlanta with huge posters stuck indiscriminately throughout the city and picturing him in a most vulgar and distasteful manner. One bill showed him in lithograph standing besides Jackson, Jefferson and Lincoln and Washington. This particular bill was most obnoxious to the defeated candidate and most inimical to his sense of judgment. He was so disheartened at the coarse display that had been made of him that he was tempted to refuse to enter the opera house. Kindly consideration for the enthusiastic audience booked for the house only deterred him from refusal.

However, when he went upon the stage, he had fully determined to speak no more under the contract he had made. He so announced himself to his managers. Roach and Comstock, next day.

It had come to Mr. Bryan's ears previous to his entry into Atlanta that Roach and Comstock had quarreled in an ugly manner over the notoriety that each was to get out of his affiliation with him. This he was willing to pass over as it had not then become public, but the vulgar display of posters and the wording of the advertisements offended him to the soul.

Here is a copy of the original telegram sent to Mr. Bryan by V. E. McBee, who was the financial backer of the lecture tour and with whom he was induced to enter into the contract: "Congratulations on your magnificent endeavor. Will you entertain non-sensational business proposition for fifty lectures for $50,000?"

Mr. Bryan answer by telegram in the affirmative. Mr. McBee was about to close a contract on this basis with Mr. Bryan when he was told that there was not enough houses south of Washington big enough to hold the people who would want to attend. He then arranged with Mr. Bryan to pay him $10,000 cash in advance for ten lectures, and to plan for the future on a basis satisfactory to both. This was agreed to after Mr. McBee had sent Mr. Bryan this letter:

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 9, 1896.
(Personal.)

Hon. William J. Bryan, Lincoln, Nebraska:

Referring to the telegraphic correspondence in regard to your lecturing. This is quite a departure from my regular vocation, but, being both personally and politically interested in your magnificent campaign, I am prompted to make this offer.

You select territory and subject for fifty lectures. With delivery you certify check for $10,000, including contract. This to be paid for last ten lectures, other fees to be paid on delivery, which shall be guaranteed. Entire details of tour arranged to your satisfaction, not more than three lectures a week expected. Urgent that tour should begin within fortnight. Write me here at Kimball House as to particulars, and if further entertained will send my attorney and representative to Lincoln to close matters at once.

V. E. McBEE.

Mr. Bryan had the close advice of friends before he shut off his tour after the lecture in Atlanta, and they agreed with him that he would be wise to discountenance any such outrageous sensationalism. Mr. Bryan promptly gave Mr. McBee a certified check for the $10,000 he had received. He was paid $1000 for his night's work and his railroad expenses.

Far from being compelled to quit on account of discouragement in respect to audiences, Mr. Bryan had every reason to believe that the tour would have been a great financial success. He valued his dignity and standing too highly to submit to vaudeville advertisement.
